Following the massive crackdown of crypto-related firms, the world's largest cryptocurrency exchange, Binance, is reportedly considering to implement the much anticipated version 0.3 protocol of Ethereum (ETH) blockchain, which has been developed over two years ago. According to a post published on the official blog of Binance, the liquidity on the exchange has stabilized, which in turn has increased the number of users. In the latest tweet, founder and CEO of the platform, CZ revealed that the decentralized exchange version 0.3 protocol is expected to be released during the end of 2019. 1/ Version 0.3 of Binance DEX is coming soon. Stay tuned! — CZ Binance (@cz_binance) December 10, 2019 As explained by a post on Medium, Binance's DEX protocol is built on top of the Ethereum blockchain, which allows the platform to use smart contracts to protect the platform's assets and the funds of its users. Moreover, the Binance DEX protocol also allows decentralized trading, as it allows anonymous trading of cryptocurrencies without needing to verify accounts or the 55cdc1ed1c
