I'm happy to announce to the community of android developers that I have found a way to get the properties of an Android Button to the user in an easy way. Normally when you need to get the properties of an

Android button you have to: 1- write the java code that handles it 2- Execute it on an android device and you have to click the button In this tutorial I'll show you how to change a button to an image button and then execute a simple bitmap that you can add to your android application. Let's begin In this tutorial I will show you how to create an image button in your application, I will also make it behave like the standard Android button. The important part of this tutorial is that you don't have to write java code or execute it in an Android device. This tutorial uses a pre-developed application I created to manage all of the images that you can get to use in your android application. When you first install the application, you can choose a button image, a text color and a back color for your buttons. The application will look for all the images you choose and show them in the application. In order to make the button work like a standard Android button you need to change the onclick method in the image button. To achieve that, you will need the following. -a button that is going to be used as the image button. -the name of the image that you will use for the button. This is the method that you need to add to your button. protected void onClick(View v) { // Do what you want } I will explain to you now how you can achieve it. To make a button to behave like an image button you need to remove it from the view and then add it again with android:backgro und="@drawable/your_image". This will make your image to appear over
